At the 2009 OD Network in Seattle we were invited to do an hour and a half “master class” for 100 people. How would you handle that assignment? A presentation? A Q & A? On a flip chart we wrote,

“What would you do if...?”

Then we asked small groups to complete the question. We got back everything you can imagine - on individuals, groups, teams, systems, societies--comic and tragic, trivial and profound. Then we had people pick questions to answer. Each person had contributions none other could make. We found ourselves bringing in everything we knew. We all learned options we never thought of. More, we experienced the collective wisdom mobilized when everybody talks about the same world.

We decided to experiment with a longer session. What can be learned in a dialogue structured to evoke every person’s experience? With no deliverables, no pressure, no wrong answers, everybody an expert, and limitless take-aways? We wonder what answers we will come up with, what dynamics will emerge, and how we will handle them.

- Bring your cases, questions, theories, and experience;
- Stump the (so-called) experts if you can;
- Help us refine an engaging method of inquiry and learning;
- Discover your own wisdom and the wisdom of the whole.

Seminar Fee - $595, includes two continental breakfasts, two lunches, breaks, a book by us, and a live-jazz supper at Marv’s house.
